

Sent: Fri, 17 Jul 2009 10:47:28 -0400
From: "Lesser, Eric P." <eric_p._lesser@who.eop.gov>
To: "Axelrod, David M." <axelrod_d@who.eop.gov>, "Axelrod, David M." <"/o=eop/ou=first administrative group/cn=recipients/cn=david_m._axelrod">
Bcc: "Axelrod, David M." <"/o=eop/ou=first administrative group/cn=recipients/cn=david_m._axelrod">
Subject: FW: FOR BOOK: Weekly Address
7-16-09 Health Care Weekly Address 550pm.doc

From: Hurwitz, Sarah K.
Sent: Thursday, July 16, 2009 5:51 PM
To: Hurwitz, Sarah K.; DL-WHO-Vet-DRAFTS; Orszag, Peter R.; Douglass, Linda D.; DeParle, Nancy-Ann M.; Aronson, Lauren; DL-WHO-Vet-BOOK_POTUS
Subject: FOR BOOK: Weekly Address

This is ready for the book, thanks.

Draft 7/16/09 5:50pm

Hurwitz

6-2554

P6/b(6)

Remarks of President Barack Obama
Weekly Address
Washington, DC
July 18, 2009

Right now in Washington, our Senate and House of Representatives are both debating proposals for health insurance reform. Today, I want to speak with you about the stakes of this debate, for our people and the future of our nation.

This is an issue that affects the health and financial well-being of every single American and the stability of our entire economy.

It's about every family unable to keep up with soaring out of pocket costs and premiums rising three times faster than wages. Every worker afraid of losing health insurance if they lose their job, or change jobs. Everyone who's worried that they may not be able to get insurance or change insurance if someone in their family has a pre-existing condition.

It's about a woman in Colorado who told us that when she was diagnosed with breast cancer, her insurance company – the one she'd paid over $700 a month – refused to pay for her treatment. She had to use up her retirement funds to save her own life.

It's about the man from Wisconsin who reported that he paid more than $24,000 for his family's premiums and deductibles last year, because even though he and his family are generally healthy, they have pre-existing conditions.

It's about every business forced to shut their doors, or shed jobs, or ship them overseas. It's about state governments overwhelmed by Medicaid, federal budgets consumed by Medicare, and deficits piling higher year after year.

This is the status quo. This is the system we have today. This is what the debate in Congress is all about: Whether we'll keep talking and tinkering and letting this problem fester as more families and businesses go under, and more Americans lose their coverage. Or whether we'll seize this opportunity – one we might not have again for generations – and finally pass health insurance reform this year, in 2009.

Now we know there are those who will oppose reform no matter what. We know the same special interests and their agents in Congress will make the same old arguments, and use the same scare tactics that have stopped reform before because they profit from this relentless escalation in health care costs. And I know that once you've seen enough ads and heard enough people yelling on TV, you might begin to wonder whether there's a grain of truth to what they're saying. So let me take a moment to answer a few of their arguments.

First, the same folks who controlled the White House and Congress for the past eight years as we ran up record deficits will argue – believe it or not – that health reform will lead to record deficits. That's simply not true. Our proposals cut hundreds of billions of dollars in unnecessary spending and unwarranted giveaways to insurance companies in Medicare and Medicaid. They change incentives so providers will give patients the best care, not just the most expensive care, which will mean big savings over time. They don't add a penny to our deficits over the next decade. And by helping improve quality and efficiency, they'll actually begin to bring our deficits under control in the long-term.

Those who oppose reform will also tell you that under our plan, you won't get to choose your doctor – that some bureaucrat will choose for you. That's also not true. Michelle and I don't want anyone telling us who our family's doctor should be – and no one should decide that for you either. Under our proposals, if you like your doctor, you keep your doctor. If you like your current insurance, you keep that insurance. Period, end of story.

Finally, they'll warn you that this is all some big plot for socialized medicine or government-run health care with long lines and rationed care. That's not true either. I don't believe that government can or should run health care. But I also don't think insurance companies should have free reign to do as they please.

That's why any plan I sign must include an insurance exchange: a one-stop shopping marketplace where you can compare the benefits, cost and track record of a variety of plans – including a public option to increase competition and keep insurance companies honest – and choose what's best for your family. And that's why we'll put an end to the worst practices of the insurance industry: no more yearly caps or lifetime caps; no more denying people care because of pre-existing conditions; and no more dropping people from a plan when they get too sick. No longer will you be without insurance, even if you lose your job or change jobs.

The good news is that people who know the system best are rallying to the cause of change. Just this past week, the American Nurses Association, representing millions of nurses across America, and the American Medical Association, which represents our nation's doctors, announced their support because they've seen first-hand the need for health insurance reform.

They know we cannot continue to cling to health industry practices that are bankrupting families, and undermining American businesses, large and small. They know we cannot let special interests and partisan politics stand in the way of reform – not this time around.

The opponents of health insurance reform would have us do nothing. But think about what doing nothing, in the face of ever increasing costs, will do to you and your family.

So today, I am urging the House and the Senate, Democrats and Republicans, to seize this opportunity, and vote for reform that gives the American people the best care at the lowest cost; that reins in insurance companies, strengthens businesses and finally gives families the choices they need and the security they deserve. Thank you.

Draft 7/16/09 5:50pm

Hurwitz

6-2554

P6/b(6)

Remarks of President Barack Obama
Weekly Address
Washington, DC
July 18, 2009

Right now in Washington, our Senate and House of Representatives are both debating proposals for health insurance reform. Today, I want to speak with you about the stakes of this debate, for our people and the future of our nation.

This is an issue that affects the health and financial well-being of every single American and the stability of our entire economy.

It's about every family unable to keep up with soaring out of pocket costs and premiums rising three times faster than wages. Every worker afraid of losing health insurance if they lose their job, or change jobs. Everyone who's worried that they may not be able to get insurance or change insurance if someone in their family has a pre-existing condition.

It's about a woman in Colorado who told us that when she was diagnosed with breast cancer, her insurance company – the one she'd paid over $700 a month – refused to pay for her treatment. She had to use up her retirement funds to save her own life.

It's about the man from Wisconsin who reported that he paid more than $24,000 for his family's premiums and deductibles last year, because even though he and his family are generally healthy, they have pre-existing conditions.

It's about every business forced to shut their doors, or shed jobs, or ship them overseas. It's about state governments overwhelmed by Medicaid, federal budgets consumed by Medicare, and deficits piling higher year after year.

This is the status quo. This is the system we have today. This is what the debate in Congress is all about: Whether we'll keep talking and tinkering and letting this problem fester as more families and businesses go under, and more Americans lose their coverage. Or whether we'll seize this opportunity – one we might not have again for generations – and finally pass health insurance reform this year, in 2009.

Now we know there are those who will oppose reform no matter what. We know the same special interests and their agents in Congress will make the same old arguments, and use the same scare tactics that have stopped reform before because they profit from this relentless escalation in health care costs. And I know that once you've seen enough ads and heard enough people yelling on TV, you might begin to wonder whether there's a grain of truth to what they're saying. So let me take a moment to answer a few of their arguments.

First, the same folks who controlled the White House and Congress for the past eight years as we ran up record deficits will argue – believe it or not – that health reform will lead to record deficits. That’s simply not true. Our proposals cut hundreds of billions of dollars in unnecessary spending and unwarranted giveaways to insurance companies in Medicare and Medicaid. They change incentives so providers will give patients the best care, not just the most expensive care, which will mean big savings over time. They don’t add a penny to our deficits over the next decade. And by helping improve quality and efficiency, they’ll actually begin to bring our deficits under control in the long-term.

Those who oppose reform will also tell you that under our plan, you won’t get to choose your doctor – that some bureaucrat will choose for you. That’s also not true. Michelle and I don’t want anyone telling us who our family’s doctor should be – and no one should decide that for you either. Under our proposals, if you like your doctor, you keep your doctor. If you like your current insurance, you keep that insurance. Period, end of story.

Finally, they’ll warn you that this is all some big plot for socialized medicine or government-run health care with long lines and rationed care. That’s not true either. I don’t believe that government can or should run health care. But I also don’t think insurance companies should have free reign to do as they please.

That’s why any plan I sign must include an insurance exchange: a one-stop shopping marketplace where you can compare the benefits, cost and track record of a variety of plans – including a public option to increase competition and keep insurance companies honest – and choose what’s best for your family. And that’s why we’ll put an end to the worst practices of the insurance industry: no more yearly caps or lifetime caps; no more denying people care because of pre-existing conditions; and no more dropping people from a plan when they get too sick. No longer will you be without insurance, even if you lose your job or change jobs.

The good news is that people who know the system best are rallying to the cause of change. Just this past week, the American Nurses Association, representing millions of nurses across America, and the American Medical Association, which represents our nation’s doctors, announced their support because they’ve seen first-hand the need for health insurance reform.

They know we cannot continue to cling to health industry practices that are bankrupting families, and undermining American businesses, large and small. They know we cannot let special interests and partisan politics stand in the way of reform – not this time around.

The opponents of health insurance reform would have us do nothing. But think about what doing nothing, in the face of ever increasing costs, will do to you and your family.

So today, I am urging the House and the Senate, Democrats and Republicans, to seize this opportunity, and vote for reform that gives the American people the best care at the lowest cost; that reins in insurance companies, strengthens businesses and finally gives families the choices they need and the security they deserve. Thank you.