- What will you be doing in that role and why is this happening now?

I was honored to be asked by President Obama to spend a year in the White House as his counselor, working to improve the performance and efficiency of government, with a special focus on a topic I care a lot about--climate, energy and environment. And most importantly, I can do the job around my 2014 race schedule.

- I heard Obama is a treadmill runner (even that he and David Cameron ran on treadmills together during a recent get-together). What sort of running advice would you give him?

He should overrule the Secret Service and find a place to run outside.

- In the wake of the Times story, a few outlets have taken note of your work in declassifying documents pertaining to government knowledge of possible alien life. Can you comment on this area of interest? Some people might find it rather curious.

I've always been a firm believer in government transparency, and even though openness might ruin the plot for an "X-Files" reboot, I'm certain the American people can be trusted with whatever information the government holds about UAP/UFOs.

Hi, John.

I saw the Times piece yesterday about your joining Obama's staff as a counselor. We'd love to update the RW piece to reflect this development. It's currently slated for the February issue, which comes out early to mid-January. If you can, we'd love to get responses before the holidays.
