POTUS started the bright New Year's morning with a visit to the campus of the University of Hawaii.

The motorcade departed the Obamas' vacation home at 10 am and traversed the island through the lush forest and ravines of Pali Highway.

According to the White House, the president, his daughters, Sasha and Malia, and his sister Maya Soetoro-Ng are visiting the East-West Center at the university. The president will meet with the incoming East-West Center President, Dr. Richard R. Vuylsteke.

Pool is holding on campus in the van.

The motorcade left the university at 11 am and headed through Honolulu to the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific. The press van peeled off at the bottom of a hill as POTUS and his family climbed the hill in the direction of the cemetery where his grandfather, Stanley Dunham, is buried. It was a short visit and at 11:30 am we are back on the road to parts unannounced.

POTUS and FLOTUS arrived at the airport in the motorcade shortly after 10 pm and spent a good ten minutes shaking hands with service members and their guests at the viewing pen. Holding hands, they then walked to the plane, climbed the stairs and turned around to wave goodbye to Hawaii for the last time as president and First Lady. We are rolling and bound for Joint Base Andrews shortly.
