FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

January 19, 2017

Readout of the President and First Lady's Call with Chancellor Angela Merkel of Germany

The President and First Lady spoke by telephone today with German Chancellor Angela Merkel and her husband, Professor Dr. Joachim Sauer, to express appreciation for their personal friendship and efforts to forge deeper partnership between Germany and the United States over the last eight years. The President thanked Chancellor Merkel for her strong, courageous, and steady leadership. The President and Chancellor agreed that close cooperation between Washington and Berlin and between the United States and Europe are essential to ensuring a sturdy trans-Atlantic bond, a rules-based international order, and the defense of values that have done so much to advance human progress in our countries and around the world. Given their eight years of friendship and partnership, the President noted that it was fitting that his final call with a foreign leader was with Chancellor Merkel, and he wished her the very best going forward.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

My fellow Americans,

It's a long-standing tradition for the sitting president of the United States to leave a parting letter in the Oval Office for the American elected to take his or her place. It's a letter meant to share what we know, what we've learned, and what small wisdom may help our successor bear the great responsibility that comes with the highest office in our land, and the leadership of the free world.

But before I leave my note for our 45th president, I wanted to say one final thank you for the honor of serving as your 44th. Because all that I've learned in my time in office, I've learned from you. You made me a better President, and you made me a better man.

Throughout these eight years, you have been the source of goodness, resilience, and hope from which I've pulled strength. I've seen neighbors and communities take care of each other during the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes. I have mourned with grieving families searching for answers -- and found grace in a Charleston church. I've taken heart from the hope of young graduates and our newest military officers. I've seen our scientists help a paralyzed man regain his sense of touch, and wounded warriors once given up for dead walk again. I've seen Americans whose lives have been saved because they finally have access to medical care, and families whose lives have been changed because their marriages are recognized as equal to our own. I've seen the youngest of children remind us through their actions and through their generosity of our obligations to care for refugees, or work for peace, and, above all, to look out for each other.

I've seen you, the American people, in all your decency, determination, good humor, and kindness. And in your daily acts of citizenship, I've seen our future unfolding. All of us, regardless of party, should throw ourselves into that work -- the joyous work of citizenship. Not just when there's an election, not just when our own narrow interest is at stake, but over the full span of a lifetime.

I'll be right there with you every step of the way.

And when the arc of progress seems slow, remember: America is not the project of any one person. The single most powerful word in our democracy is the word 'We.' 'We the People.' 'We shall overcome.'

Yes, we can.

President Barack Obama

A lunch lid has been called until 2 p.m.

Some color from the White House grounds on President Obama's final day in office:

The sun has poked out from behind the clouds over 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. National Park Service grounds crews are busy sprucing up the North Lawn in anticipation of tomorrow's inaugural festivities.

Landscapers were putting down new mulch underneath the shrubbery and a street cleaner swept up debris from the driveway where President-elect Trump is expected to enter the building.

The White House feels emptier than usual, with many staffers departing over the past several days. Photos of Obama, his family and staff that previously lined the West Wing walls have been taken down, though some are still hanging as of this pool report.

Incoming Trump White House press staffer Raj Shah and RNC spokesperson Lindsay Walters were here getting a tour of the press basement and learning the ropes of the White House computer system.

President Obama has no public events on his schedule today, but he is scheduled to have his final weekly lunch with Vice President Biden at 12:30 PM.

A travel/photo lid has been called at 4:10 p.m.

Desiree Barnes, former press wrangler and current assistant to Josh Earnest, announced the lid "from your original wrangling team" over the White House intercom system.

"It has truly been a pleasure," said Barnes.

Former wrangler Peter Velz chimed in with his catchphrase, "Thank you, pool."

"This is what we prepared for!" Barnes shouted.

And with that, Barack Obama's final full day as president has come to an unofficial close.

It has been a pleasure serving as your pooler today. Signing off.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

January 19, 2017

TEXT OF A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT
TO THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE

January 19, 2017

Dear Mr. Speaker: (Mr. President:)

For 15 years, the United States has detained hundreds of people at the detention facility at Guantanamo Bay, a facility that never should have been opened in the first place. Rather than keeping us safer, the detention facility at Guantanamo undermines American national security. Terrorists use it for propaganda, its operations drain our military resources during a time of budget cuts, and it harms our partnerships with allies and countries whose cooperation we need against today's evolving terrorist threat. By any measure, the costs of keeping it open far exceed the complications involved in closing it.

As President, I have tried to close Guantanamo. When I inherited this challenge, it was widely recognized that the facility -- which many around the world continue to condemn -- needed to close. Unfortunately, what had previously been bipartisan support for closure suddenly became a partisan issue. Despite those politics, we have made progress. This Administration established a comprehensive, interagency review process to assess whether the transfer of a detainee is in the national security interest of the United States. Under this rigorous process, we have transferred 196 detainees from Guantanamo with arrangements designed to keep them from engaging in acts that pose a threat to the United States and our allies. Of the nearly 800 detainees at one time held at the facility, today only 41 remain.

The Department of Defense has also provided the Congress with a comprehensive plan to finally close Guantanamo once and for all. In addition to calling for us to continue to identify and effectuate secure transfer opportunities, it calls for the continued periodic review of the threat posed by individuals still detained, the use of all legal tools to deal with the remaining detainees still held under law of war detention, and the identification of a secure location in the United States to hold remaining detainees who are subject to military commissions or who we have determined must continue to be detained because they pose a continuing significant threat to the United States. I have included an update to that plan here.

The restrictions imposed by the Congress that prevent us from imprisoning detainees -- even to prosecute and secure a life sentence -- in the United States make no sense. No person has ever escaped one of our super-max or military prisons here, ever. There is simply no justification beyond politics for the Congress' insistence on keeping the facility open. Members of Congress who obstruct efforts to close the facility, given the stakes involved for our security, have abdicated their responsibility to the American people. They have placed politics above the ongoing costs to taxpayers, our relationships with our allies, and the threat posed to U.S. national security by leaving open a facility that governments around the world condemn and which hinders rather than helps our fight against terrorism.

If this were easy, we would have closed Guantanamo years ago. But history will cast a harsh judgment on this aspect of our fight against terrorism and those of us who fail to bring it to a responsible end. Once again, I encourage the Congress to close the facility and permit more of our brave men and women in uniform serving at Guantanamo Bay to return to meeting the challenges of the 21st century around the globe. There remains bipartisan support for closing Guantanamo and we can do so in a responsible and secure way that also saves the American taxpayer money. Guantanamo is contrary to our values and undermines our standing in the world, and it is long past time to end this chapter in our history.

Sincerely,

BARACK OBAMA

Obama Administration Efforts to Close the Guantanamo Bay Detention Facility

As the President has made clear since his first day in office, closing the Guantanamo Bay detention facility is fundamentally consistent with the national security and foreign policy interests of the United States as well as with our values as Americans. Its continued operation undermines our standing in the world and weakens our national security by emboldening violent extremists, damaging our relations with key allies and partners, and draining our nation's resources. Consistent with the United States' commitment to the rule of law and universal human rights, this Administration has spared no effort to safely and responsibly close the detention facility at Guantanamo and to bring this chapter of our history to an end.

Of the nearly 800 detainees at one time held at Guantanamo Bay, more than 90 percent have been transferred, including more than 500 detainees transferred by the prior Administration and 196 detainees transferred by this Administration. As of January 19, 2017, 41 detainees remain at Guantanamo Bay.

In its efforts to safely and responsibly close the Guantanamo Bay detention facility, this Administration has pursued four lines of effort simultaneously: (1) identifying and effectuating transfer opportunities for detainees designated for transfer; (2) continuing to periodically review those detainees who are not currently designated for transfer or who are not currently facing military commission charges to ensure detention is only continued when necessary; (3) continuing with ongoing military commissions prosecutions and, for those detainees who remain designated for continued law of war detention, identifying individualized dispositions where available, including transfer to third countries – including for foreign prosecution; and (4) urging Congress to lift the ban on transfers to the United States to allow for the safe relocation of the limited number of detainees who are not currently approved for transfer or for whom another disposition has not yet been identified to an appropriate site in the United States, while continuing to identify other appropriate and lawful dispositions. In addition, all detainees at Guantanamo continue to be able to pursue of the writ of habeas corpus.

(1) Securely Transferring Detainees Designated for Transfer by the President's National Security Team

This Administration has developed and successfully implemented a transfer process to ensure that detainees continue to be held only when necessary and appropriate, that detainees are transferred from Guantanamo only after a rigorous interagency review process evaluates the specific circumstances of the transfer and determines that any potential threat posed by the detainee is mitigated, including through tailored security assurances, and that such transfers are consistent with our humane treatment policy. This Administration conducted 196 such transfers, each of which occurred only after the United States Government engaged in detailed, specific conversations with the receiving country about the potential threat a detainee may pose after transfer, and the measures the receiving country will take in order to sufficiently mitigate that threat and to ensure humane treatment. Reflecting the strong international support for Guantanamo closure efforts, the Administration successfully repatriated 52 detainees to 13 countries, resettled 144 detainees who could not be repatriated in 30 different countries, including two detainees transferred for prosecution in a third country. In addition, one detainee was successfully prosecuted in an Article III court in the United States and is currently serving a life sentence following a conviction for conspiracy to destroy government buildings and property.

As of January 19, 2017, of the 41 detainees who remain at Guantanamo, 5 have been determined to be eligible for transfer by relevant national security departments and agencies (Departments of Defense, State, Justice, and Homeland Security, the Office of the Chairman Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence) through the interagency 2009 Executive Order (E.O.) 13492 Task Force or the ongoing E.O. 13567 Periodic Review Board process. The remainder are either subject to ongoing military commission proceedings, serving a sentence handed down by the military commissions, or have been determined by the President's national security team to pose a risk at this time such that they should continue to be held under the laws of war. A decision to designate a detainee for transfer reflects the best judgment of U.S. Government experts, including counterterrorism, intelligence, diplomatic, and law enforcement professionals, that, to the extent a detainee poses a continuing threat to the United States, the threat could be sufficiently mitigated—and the national interest would be served—if the detainee were transferred to another country subject to appropriate security measures.

Under the framework developed by this Administration, the United States has worked extensively with receiving governments to ensure that appropriate security measures are in place to mitigate the risk that the transferred individual will engage or reengage in any terrorist or other hostile activity that threatens the United States or U.S. persons or interests. In particular, the Administration has sought assurances from receiving governments that they will take certain security measures that, in the United States Government's experience, have proven to be effective in mitigating the threat that may be posed by former detainees. The specific measures put in place vary depending on a range of factors, including the specific threat a detainee may pose, the geographic location of the receiving country, the receiving country's domestic laws, the receiving country's capabilities and resources, and, where applicable, the receiving country's international legal obligations. Importantly, the Administration only transferred a detainee after the Secretary of Defense determined that the transfer was in the national security interest of the United States, the threat posed by the detainee will be substantially mitigated, and the transfer is consistent with our humane treatment policy, as required by law. In each case, the specific security assurances negotiated take into account the individual facts and circumstances of the transfer, including the detainee's specific threat profile at the time of transfer, as well as the capabilities and domestic legal authorities of the receiving government.

The rigorous interagency review process put in place by this Administration has resulted in a measured, responsible, and thoughtful approach to transfers that places the safety of Americans paramount. For detainees transferred since 2009, less than six percent of former detainees have been confirmed by the Intelligence Community of engaging or reengaging in terrorist activity, and less than seven percent of former detainees are suspected of reengaging in such activity. Any potential incidence of reengagement is taken very seriously and relevant agencies have worked in close coordination through military, intelligence, law enforcement, and diplomatic channels to mitigate any threat posed by such activities, including taking follow-on action when necessary.

(2) Continued Review of Detainees by the Periodic Review Board

Consistent with our values and our international obligations, it is imperative to ensure that law of war detention continues only when necessary and lawful. The Periodic Review Board (PRB) is an interagency body with career professional representatives from the Department of Defense, the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Justice, the Department of State, the Office of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence. The process outlined in E.O. 13567 charges the PRB with examining whether, given current intelligence and other information, the continued detention of the detainee remains necessary to protect against a continuing significant threat to the security of the United States.

In 2016, the Administration concluded the initial 64 PRB reviews, with 38 detainees approved for transfer by the PRB. There are 26 detainees not currently approved for transfer or charged or convicted by military commission. Under the process established by Executive Order 13567, these detainees will continue to receive PRB file reviews every six months and a full review every three years or when the PRB determines it is warranted based on the file reviews. Notwithstanding the PRB's continuing review, each of these detainees continues to be considered for an individualized disposition, as discussed below.

(3) Continuing Military Commissions and Pursuing Disposition Options for Remaining Detainees

The most effective option for dealing with individuals detained outside military theaters continues to be our strong, proven federal courts. Our federal district courts have an established track record of safely and securely conducting high-profile national security trials. Indeed, the record of Article III courts in terrorism cases – providing fair, thorough, and speedy disposition of these cases – is outstanding. Recent history proves that our courts system is capable of dispensing justice even to some of the most hardened terrorists in the highest-profile cases.

Despite significant, ongoing setbacks and the complexity of addressing novel issues in the military commissions setting, military commissions convened to address offenses recognized by the international laws of war continue to be an option for individuals who remain detained at Guantanamo. Currently, ten detainees have ongoing military commission proceedings. One has been sentenced pursuant to a military commission proceeding, which is the subject of continuing judicial review, and two are awaiting sentencing. We can expect lengthy appeals once the active cases go to trial and reach verdicts. All of this is expected to cost at least $91 million per year and litigation is expected to continue for several years.

Of the 26 detainees who currently are not designated for transfer and are not in some stage of the military commissions process, 16 were initially referred by the Guantanamo Review Task Force for prosecution (either before a military commission or in an Article III court).

Further, detainees not otherwise designated for transfer or subject to prosecution or conviction by military commissions or Article III courts have continued to be considered on a case-by-case basis for transfer to a foreign country, including for foreign prosecution. Any such transfer would be undertaken consistent with applicable domestic and international law and our humane treatment policy and would be carried out only where it was assessed that the conditions under which the detainee would be transferred would substantially mitigate the risk to the United States or U.S. persons or interests.

(4) Relocation of a Limited Detainee Population to the United States

For the limited number of detainees who are not designated for transfer and for whom another disposition has not yet been identified, the Administration has sought to work with Congress to relocate them from the Guantanamo Bay detention facility to a secure detention facility in the United States, while continuing to identify other appropriate and lawful dispositions. Based on past reviews and a 2015 survey of potential detention locations in the United States, the Department of Defense has determined that, with modifications, a variety of Department of Defense, Bureau of Prisons, and state prison facilities could safely, securely, and humanely house a limited number of Guantanamo detainees for the purpose of military commissions and continued law of war detention, as necessary and subject to continued periodic review.

Transferring the small number of remaining detainees to a U.S. facility and closing the detention facility at Guantanamo would result in substantial cost savings, enabling the Department of Defense to put these resources towards meeting the challenges the United States faces around the world. The Fiscal Year 2015 cost to operate the Guantanamo Bay detention mission was approximately $445 million. In addition to annual operating costs, maintaining the facility would require approximately $200 million in needed military construction, and $25 million for related furnishing. Based on site surveys and an in-depth review of every major cost center associated with detention operations, the Department of Defense assessed that this plan, compared to keeping Guantanamo open, would lower recurring costs by up to $85 million a year. Over 10 years, it would generate savings of more than $300 million. Over 20 years, the savings would be up to $1.7 billion and would allow us to ensure our security, uphold our highest values around the world, and save American taxpayers a lot of money at the same time.

As the President has said, spending hundreds of millions of dollars to keep 41 men in an isolated detention facility in Cuba, year after year, is not consistent with our values or our interests as a Nation. It undermines our standing in the world and it is viewed as a stain on our longstanding record of upholding the highest standards, of adhering to the rule of law. It is long past time to close this chapter in our history.
